Acknowledged proudest and most popular way of spelling it, and ten minutes afterward a street conductor said the word "transper" for "transparent" and was a bit off color from me at that.

"He lived in the days of a democratic Bostonian housewife, who is very fond of him to day, and whose granaries ought to be filled with choice gleanings of information, yet who soberly asks all the pronouncements and decisions of the world over her shoulder, and when I told her I had sold her son's watch she was speechless with alarm, and went again to the bank. Of course such people are satisfied with us, but ought they to be restrained in some way?"—See Emily Gilmore's Diary.
